The evening's highlight will be the presence of one of the world's greatest Flamenco female singers, Carmen Linares, who is considered to be a living legend. She will be honored with the Berklee Master of Mediterranean Music Award, for her achievements throughout her extraordinary career, for her unquestionable commitment to promote women in the arts and for being a seminal voice for a younger generation of Flamenco singers.

AZCONA BY DAVID TRUEBA

- On Thursday, October 17 at 7 pm. Free.

- At Instituto Cervantes, 211 E 49th Street, New York, NY 10017.

Rafael Azcona would have liked to be the invisible man, however his name is engraved in the history of Spanish cinema. As described by those who knew him, Azcona was a magnificent writer, with a sharp social irony. He began writing stories in the satirical magazine La Codorniz, where he already demonstrated his enormous talent to criticize, always in a humorous way, the current state of values. The documentary Imprescindibles, directed by journalist Fernando Olmeda, pays tribute to this brilliant screenwriter and shows his most human version through testimonies from people who knew and worked with him. Spanish novelist, film director and screenwriter David Trueba will guide us through the works of the great Azcona.

In the movie, she sings songs written by Limón exclusively for the screenplay.

Her current project –comprised of music and production by Javier Limón– has already been signed by IMG/Casa Limón Records. Her debut album called Voy was released during the spring of 2019, and is distributed worldwide through The Orchard.
