

El Greco in New York

New York celebrates the 400th anniversary of El Greco's death with an unprecedented set of institutional collaborations and exhibits.

EXHIBITIONS:

Paintings by El Greco from the Metropolitan Museum and Hispanic Society of America Collections

To commemorate the 400th anniversary of the death of El Greco (Domenikos Theotokopoulos, 1541–1614), this special collaboration brings together all of the artist's paintings in The Metropolitan Museum of Art's collection, the finest outside the Museo del Prado in Madrid, and display them with six loans from the Hispanic Society of America spanning El Greco's entire career, from his arrival in Venice in 1567, through his move to Rome in 1570 and his long residence in Toledo, Spain, from 1577 until his death in 1614.

El Greco at the Frick Collection

During the same period, New York's Frick Collection exhibits its three El Greco pictures together for the first time. Henry Clay Frick had a deep appreciation for Spanish painting, particularly the work of El Greco, the extraordinary Greek artist who, after a brief period in Italy, spent most of his life in Toledo, Spain. Frick traveled to Spain twice and acquired the three works by the artist between 1905 and 1913
