

Occupied Spaces: Global Mode > Omnivores by Eva Davidova

“Global Mode > Omnivores” at Instituto Cervantes New York is a solo exhibition featuring a network of digital installations by new media artist Eva Davidova.

Eva Davidova explores what it could mean to prioritize experimental strategies that disrupt prevailing hierarchies, utilizing ancient mythos to examine past, present, and looming global disasters. Just as aspects of her work alternate between Spanish and English they likewise traverse forms of non-verbal communication —body language, falling in space, facial cues— belonging to both humans and non-human. Drawing from ancient mythologies (Cassandra, Narcissus, Prometheus), the artist illuminates their allegorical powers through emergent technologies, speaking to past, present, and looming global crises.

The exhibition sets out a network of installations that largely rely upon audience interaction. The community at large provides a critical underlying foundation to Davidova’s practice and this exhibition’s roster reflects her commitment to these alliances. Collaborators featured in Global Mode > Omnivores include performers MX. Oops, Heather Mo’witz, and Naicha Diaby, the artist/ musician Matthew D. Gantt, and the artist/ technologist Danielle McPhatter.

Giving expression to the idea of interdependency and collective action, Global Mode > Omnivores is also a platform for Tentacles —a “social sculpture” with the intervention of guest artists Janet Biggs (US), Marc H.
