

Ya'alah Ya'alah

An evening of music and song from al-Andalus and North Africa, featuring the large ensemble of 20 vocalists and musicians.

In al-Andalus (Southern Spain), peoples of the three Abrahamic faiths—Islam, Judaism, and Christianity—shared their arts and sciences for more than five hundred years, creating a multicultural canon of music and poetry. Jews and Muslims who migrated to North Africa in 1492 have carried that Andalusian musical tradition forward in Morocco and Algeria. It flourishes today in New York City with the New York Andalus Ensemble.

Reflecting the cultural pluralism that characterizes this music, the ensemble sings in Arabic, Hebrew, and Ladino, emphasizing the expressive quality of the region's shared tradition while cherishing the individual cultures that comprise it.
