After acclaimed North American orchestral debuts last year, Spanish pianist Javier Perianes undertakes a solo recital tour featuring classics of the piano repertoire, including works by his countrymen Manuel de Falla and Isaac Albéniz.

38-year-old Perianes is one of today's most celebrated and beloved Spanish pianists, enjoying a top-level career that last year saw him making his debut with major U.S. orchestras, from New York and Los Angeles Philharmonic to Chicago and Boston Symphony, and in Spain with the Wiener Philharmoniker.

Perianes will return to the U.S. this spring for a solo recital tour, starting on April 29 at UDC Theater of the Arts in Washington D.C., unfolding at the Frick Collection in New York on April 30 April, and Herbst Theatre in San Francisco on May 6 , before moving to Canada and South America.

The tour's recital program comprise, among other works, Schubert's Sonatas for Piano in A major and B-flat major and the Drei Klavierstücke, a selection from Debussy's Préludes, and de Falla's arrangement for solo piano of movements from El amor brujo. "Schubert occupies the first half of my recital programme," notes Javier, as he is releasing in spring an all-Schubert album. The program's second half is a combination of Debussy's homage to Spanish music and works by de Falla and Albeniz, exploring the connections between the composers.
