

'Pasos al azar' ('Random Steps')

A tragicomedy born from the research about women in the Spanish Golden Age as part of Teatro de la Luna's 17th International Festival of Hispanic Theater.

Alone on the Moors of Castille, three female comedians (popular actresses) discover that their director has died. Far from anywhere and with a sense that they are being threatened from all directions, they ask themselves: What do we do with the dead man? Speaking in a made-up language, they describe with words of Golden-Age beauty everything about how it feels to exist in the present that surrounds and shows itself to us.
