Explore the unique artistry of Mexico's Guillermo del Toro including Spanish films The Devil's Backbone, Pan's Labyrinth, The Orphanage and Julia's Eyes.

An avid fan of comic books, fantasy and horror while growing up, del Toro started in movies as a special effects makeup artist. His films are distinguished by exquisite art direction, makeup effects and cinematography (the Mexican-Spanish coproduction Pan's Labyrinth won Oscars in all three categories), and a strong visual sensibility well acquainted with pulp fiction, genre tradition and folklore.

Where other genre filmmakers might rely too heavily on non-stop action, violent content, green-screen acting and CGI effects, del Toro has been judicious in their use, privileging old-school makeup wizardry and animatronic models. An accomplished screenwriter, del Toro also stands out for his unabashed emotionalism and delight in allegory.

Not only a writer/director on his own films but a prolific producer of others, del Toro has shepherded the work of younger filmmakers like the Juan Antonio Bayona, contemporaries like Alejandro González Iñárritu and Alfonso and Carlos Cuarón, plus a number of animation filmmakers, working in both feature film and television.
